SMART ONE-PIECE CLOTH DRESS;
NOVELTIES IN STYLISH HATS

AS TO "button, button, who's got the button," there are none missing this season within fashion's domain. The stylist is not losing sight of a button of any description, employing myriads of them either in a useful or an ornamental way. In consequence, button counters present a scene of unusual animation, for choosing buttons for one's new frock or coat has become a matter of outstanding importance.

The mode smiles approvingly on the practical yet smartly styled cloth frock which buttons up the front like the one shown in the picture. For the eccentric. The picturesque African draped headress happens to be the inspiration of one of the noted French modistes. Another leading designer adopts the Russian effects. All are charming and are proving popular with lovers of charming millinery this season.

In materials no less of novelty is expressed. Flat fur, notably shaved lamb and spotted calfskin as supplied by fur, supply another sensation in the millinery story for this season.

Then, too, the prevalence of exquisite beige velours helps turn the tailored twill, flannel or crepe wool frock, self-colored hosiery buttons are considered good form, or cloth-covered ones if so preferred.

Fashion, however, does not expect one to be uncaringly practical when it comes to the buttons we wear on our frocks and our coats. At the sight of the adorable jeweled buttons which are making their appearance in such great numbers this season, one loses zest for things too utilitarian and prosaic. That is why so many of the pretty crepe and silk frocks fairly sparkle with buttons set in rhinestones. At throat and at grille like jeweled buttons prove a beautifying touch to many a costume. The velvet frock, which leads all others this season, in black or in color, needs no other embellishment to lend it the sophisticated look of the link rhinestone buttons positioned advantageously at neck and at waistline.

Even buttons to buttons is not a far cry, and if the case does not perform the act of fastening the belt or skirt, the other does. Especially is this true in regard to the popular renaissance dress made which are clasped together at the front waistline.

Millinery, ever capricious and always doing the unexpected thing, is giving some extra thrills this season. There is, for instance, the matter of draping which is truly extraordinary. Especially so when the draping is been trimmed hat pictured in the lower left corner of the group shown above. Combining this group of stylish hats is a turban most cunningly draped with a deep-side effect and two smart-looking spheres piercing the felt nap most effectively.

Among other imported models using hat fur is a striking African draped model made of alternating rows of black and gray shawl cloth.

Just What Occurs
Inside Voltmeter

Happenings Differ in Detail in Various Types of Meters.

By JOSEPH L. MCGRATH

In Boston Globe.

When testing "A," "B" or "C" batteries with a voltmeter the terminals of the meter are connected to the positive and negative of the battery and the pointer of the meter flies over to a certain point on a calibrated scale.

What happens inside the meter differs in detail in different meters, but in all common types, current flows in at one terminal, by force of the voltage, performs its duty in the meter, and flows out at the other terminal.

In a perfect voltmeter there would be no current flowing through the meter, but we do not need such a degree of perfection. By allowing a very small current to flow, magnetism is set up which causes the needle to register. The force acting on the needle is figured by multiplying the number of turns of wire in a coil in the meter by the amount of current flowing through it.

As example: A coil having 100 turns with a current of .075 ampere would give a product of 7.5, and a coil of 50 turns with a current of .150 ampere would also give a product of 7.5. Now let us assume that the force represented by 7.5 will cause the needle to read 45 volts on the scale. Though both meters read 45 volts on the scale, one is a good meter and the other is not so good because it is too far from our theoretical standard and has excessive losses.

Other Important Factors.

If we had perfect voltmeters we could leave them connected in the circuit at all times, but because even a good meter will take .075 amperes which would be a large percentage of the normal current of a "B" battery, it is not well to leave the meter in circuit.

The bearing in which the needle swings is another important factor in a meter, for a poor bearing means that extra current will be required in the coil to swing the needle.

The better meters, therefore, have more turns in their coils and better bearing than the cheaper type, all for the purpose of keeping the current at a minimum and the efficiency high. High efficiency also means correct indication and that is what we use meters to get.

The Voltmeter.

Fig. 1 shows the principal parts inside of one type of voltmeter. This meter may be connected with either terminal positive. Other meters of different type must have the terminal marked "Positive" or "Plus" connected to the positive side of the battery. An example of connections for testing a 22½-volt "B" battery is shown. Connection to "minus" and 22½ would give the voltage of the other 22½-volt battery. Connection to "minus" and 45 would give the voltage of the two batteries together.

Fig. 2, A, represents the normal maximum current which may be taken from, for instance, a "B" battery. The amount of current required to operate a good voltmeter is represented by the flow through "B." The amount of current required to operate a poor meter would all pass C. If the maximum current available through A is passed into C, it is seen that the meter connected to C will not operate correctly due to the insufficient supply.

Testing Storage Batteries

Storage "A" batteries should never be tested with an ammeter or a low-resistance voltmeter, as these instruments cause the battery to discharge at a high rate and as a result greatly reduce the life of the battery. The hydrometer is the best instrument to test storage batteries with. When the battery is fully charged it will register between 1.280 and 1.300.

Soldering Flux

Only pure resin flux should be used for all soldered joints. Tests show that where acid pastes and compounds are used they either spatter, fume or run over surrounding delicate parts. This causes leakage and reduces resistance in a manner comparable to a grid leak. Therefore, these fluxes should never be used on radio work.

What Is "Static"?

Static is caused by lightning flashes, often many hundreds of miles away. The lightning flash sets up a train of radio waves which, when they strike a receiving antenna, interfere with the reception of stations. No device has been discovered as yet which will eliminate static interference as experienced with the ordinary radio receiver.

"Truphonic" Audio System Uses a Grid Impedance

The year's one new idea in quality audio amplification is the "truphonic" system, which makes use of a grid impedance coil.

When a transformer is used, the grid potential has to be kept negative. As soon as the grid goes positive, there is a partly shortened circuit in the secondary of the transformer and a temporary reduction of the magnetic coupling. The result is distortion.

The "truphonic" system has been developed and magnetic coupling has been eliminated. In the diagram is illustrated the "figure 8" lamination by means of which the two choke coils, plate and grid, are mounted on the same lamination. Through the fixed condenser linking the two coils which is very high compared with other resistance or inductive impedance circuits.

The amplification factor is kept constant within a very small percentage from the lowest notes received to the highest harmonics or overtones. Regarding the amount of amplification, three stages of the "truphonic" system will give a greater amplification than two stages of transformer in a ratio of about 5 to 4.

It has been found helpful to add a fixed resistor of 25,000 ohms, connected between the E. post of the first coupler and the common ground and "A" minus lead, in series with the grid coil.

United States naval stations along the Atlantic coast have started a regular system for broadcasting weather reports to aircraft in flight and for the exchange of weather information between naval air stations.

When computing the length of the radio aerial the lead-in should be counted as part of the length. This part of the antenna is just as important as the part supported in the horizontal plane.

Because connections have a bad habit of working loose every effort should be made to keep them tight, and, in many cases, they should be soldered to insure staying tight. A lead connection either means a noisy set or weak signals.

Shielding post strips should be so arranged that all high-potential terminals are as far apart as possible. It is also wise to place the aerial post at one end of the strip and the ground post at the other. In this way, leakage between terminals will be kept at a minimum.

Take Salts to Flush Kidneys if Bladder Bothers or Back Hurts

Eating too much rich food may produce kidney trouble in some form, says a well-known authority, because the acids created excite the kidneys. Then they become overworked, get sluggish, clog up and cause all sorts of distress, particularly backache and misery in the kidney region, rheumatic twinges, severe headaches, acid stomach, constipation, torpid liver, sleeplessness, bladder and urinary irritation.

The moment your back hurts or kidneys aren't acting right, or if bladder bothers you, begin drinking lots of good water and also get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any good pharmacy; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys may then act fine. This famous salt is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for years to flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to activity; also to neutralize the acids in the system so that they no longer irritate, thus often relieving bladder disorders.

Jad Salts can not injure anyone; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which millions of men and women take now and then to help keep the kidneys and urinary organs clean, thus often avoiding serious kidney disorders.

PORTO BELLO GOLD

By ARTHUR D. HOWDEN SMITH

COPYRIGHT BY ARTHUR D. HOWDEN SMITH

CHAPTER XIX—Continued

"Well, Long John," he leered, "it seems like 'twas you 'n' me. The Articles says them what votes for one feller goes to one side, and them what votes for t'other goes opposite. So, seeln' as you're on the la'b'd side, I'll say them as votes for you goes la'b'd and them as votes for me goes sta'b'd."

"Suits me," grunted Silver.

There was a subdued rustling and patter of feet as the men divided, and the lanternlight revealed two unequal groups on either side of the mizzen with Bones sitting on his barrel between them. Probably three-fifths of the crew had voted for him.

"Well, Long John," he said without trying to repress the triumph in his tones, "d'ye want to tell over the vote?"

"No," replied Silver briefly. "You win."

Bones rubbed his hands gleefully. "Ah, I win, do I?"

"I said yes."

The opposing factions regarded each other like packs of wolves preparing to dispute the carcass of a freshly-killed moose. I suspected for an instant that they would fight, but I misjudged Silver's self-control. Galled he might be, but he did not permit the sting to his pride to influence his policy.

"You win, Bill," he repeated, "and I'm the first to wish ye joy o' it. And seeln' as you're dooly elected, 'spose you tell us what your plans are for the ship?"

"Plans?" answered Bones warily. "What plans might ye mean?"

"Are ye for liftin' the treasure on the two islands or beatin' 'up for more?"

Bones reflected. He was not nearly so clever as Silver, and I imagine he knew it. He feared a trap, but study as he might he could not detect any pitfall behind the innocent question.

"I'll be guided by the crew," he announced triumphantly. "You're gentlemen adventurers, all o' ye. Name your wishes!"

"This time the crew looked instinctively to Silver for a lead.

"Ye got plenty of treasure in them island caches," he said tentatively. "Speakin' for myself, I'm for collectin' what we got, takin' three or four ships and dividin' 'up for different countries, accordin' to what men seek. There's enough waitin' for our spades to make us all comfortable for life, and them indas as wants to go on the Account again can easy do it. Turn over the Walrus to 'em if they fancy it. I don't care. But some o' us 'ud had enough o' the sea, and we'll try our ease ashore."

A shout of approval capped this speech. There was not a man but was lured by the prospect of thousands of pounds to spend on the right side of the gallows. And like all sailors after a series of hard voyages, they never wanted to see a ship again—or so they thought.

Bones was an enthusiastic for Silver's plan as any.

"Aye, aye," he applauded. "Long John has the right idea. We'll water tomorrow, and then we'll try for the Dead Man's Chest."

And he began to shout drunkenly the song that Flint had died singing:

"Fifteen men on the Dead Man's Chest—
Yo-ho-ho, and a bottle of rum!
Drink and the devil had done for the Chest—
Yo-ho-ho, and a bottle of rum!"

Other men joined in, and as if by magic panmilk of rum appeared, Bones drank several whilst we watched.

"You drink wi' me, buccle!" he yelled his supporters. "An easy skipper is Bill Bones. Hum for all, and to—we discipline!"

"They howled joyfully over this, and what I had expected to provide a free fight seemed about to develop into nothing worse than such an orgy of intoxication as occurred almost every night aboard the Walrus. But it did not suit Silver's plans to have all restraint cast off at that point. He stamped forward into the circle of lantern light, with Pew, Black Dog, Darby and a dozen others at his back.

"elay, mates," he cried. "We got a vast task to settle here. Time to carouse afterward."

"There's no time for drinkin' like the time ye ha' the liquor at your elbow," retorted Bones.

"And them's true words," assented Silver heartily. "And 'tis plain to be seen as you're a skipper the lads'll all be little for Bill. But I was just fingerin' as we none o' us has ever asked the prisoners how long 'twill take to dig up that treasure o' Murray's. So I makes bold to suggest we have 'em up here and put 'em through their paces. 'Taint no ways fight as prisoners should be as close-mouthed as Flint let 'em be. He was a good mate, that was, but I allow thought them swabs pulled the wool a mile over his eyes, blow me if I didn't."

I could see Bones slowly run his tongue over his lips, blinking his eyes the while. He liked this idea. So did the crew. They were in the humor for battling whoever were at their mercy.

"Have 'em out," ruled Bones. "Long John's right."

"Aye, have 'em out," yelled the crew. "Make 'em dance!"

Silver's hard, polished-agate eyes glinted around the circle of savage faces and came to rest upon Bones' sudden visage.

"Run aft, Darby, there's the sweet lad," he said, "and bring us the prisoners."

"Not—not—her!" answered Darby haltingly.

"Yes, her," replied Silver with a slight emphasis.

And one of his hands reached out, and his strong fingers tweaked the Irish boy's ear. Darby yelled.

"O' course, you bring her," Silver continued. "Why's she too good to tell us what she knows, mates? Just because she had Andrew Murray's favor, I wonder!"

"Not—"

Darby started to protest again, but Silver cut him off with a word that dripped chill ferocity.

"Skip!"

"Fetch up the wench, boy," growled Bones, "or I'll give ye a taste o' Murray's tringles."

"Fetch her up!" howled the crew in rabid chorus. "Let's ha' a look at the wench!"

Darby started toward us with tears running down his cheeks. We could see him picking his way slowly through the crowd. A man kicked him as we watched. Poor Darby! He had been Flint's favorite, and there are always men in any crew to hate the captain's pet.

I looked at Peter, and he met my gaze with dumb foreboding.

"We might take to the water," I said.

Molra spoke behind us.

"You will do no such thing," she answered. "Nor will I. We are not yet in such evil case."

"You don't know—"

"They would surely overtake us," she argued. "No, no, Bob; we must wait and pick a better time if we can."

"In," approved Peter. "Dot's right. I think—"

He hesitated.

"Silver will be nuzzing some hidden plan," supplemented Molra.

"Ja," he said. "How did you know?"

"I guessed," she said. "Glory, I will have been listening behind ye this quarter-glass, for I had a feeling in me there was new wickedness afoot. But here's Darby, and for his sake we'd best be going quickly."

Darby fronted us with a gulp.

"Silver bade me—"

Molra slipped between Peter and me and dropped her hand on his shoulder.

"Don't ye be taking heed to what they say," she comforted him. "Faith, 'tis you are the grand knight, Darby lad, and I am that proud o' ye I could be giving ye a bit of a kerchief or gaudy ribbon to wear in your hat—only that ye will have no hat and me neither ribbon nor kerchief! But let's be after trying what the rogues want with us."

And out she marched at the boy's side before one or the other of us could step ahead.

The ranks of pirates parted to admit our procession, and we threaded the shadows to the edge of the central pool of light where Silver leaned upon his crutch. He moved aside to make room for us, and I found myself at his right hand. Perhaps fifteen feet away Bones sat on his barrel, his coarse face flushed and shiny, his cruel eyes devouring Molra's lissome grace. The scores of others were just so many vague blurs to me, but Molra frowned about her with a kind of high pride looked stolidly over the heads of the throng. It was his way when he fronted danger; behind his mask of fat little eyes were darting daggers from face to face, probing, guessing, estimating.

Silver spoke first.

"Well, here they be, Bill."

Bones' tongue traveled the circle of his lips twice before he replied; he did not once take his gaze from Molra.

"A proper wench, ain't ye?" he frowned.

"In ye tell me so!" she exclaimed. And the pirates screeched with laughter.

"Lucky, ye are," sneered Bones. "Ye need tamin', and I ha' a hankerin' to take ye in hand."

"'Twould take ten of your like," retorted Molra, nose in air.

Silver interposed in the midst of a second burst of laughter. I had to admire the second's defiance. He contrived to appear to be coming to the rescue of Bones in such a way as to rouse all the men's resentment against the cause of the implied humiliation.

"Sure, mistress," said Long John very respectfully, "what the cap'n would know is how long it should take to shift the treasure Cap'n Murray had ye bury on the Dead Man's Chest!"

Molra's nose remained in air.

"If ye were not afraid of the hard work it would maybe take ye as much as the half of a watch," she answered.

He addressed me with equal respect, requiring confirmation of what she had said. I gave it, as did Peter.

"And is it far from the shore?" he asked her then.

"Some would say yes, and some might call it over near," she flashed.

At that Bones slid off his barrel.

"Tamin' is what I said ye needed, and tamin' is what ye'll get, my girl," he announced. "Leave the rest to me, Silver. I'll take her aft and soon find out all she knows."

"There's Rule Four, Bill," said Silver quickly.

"Blow Rule Four! Murray and Flint wrote them blasted Articles, and they're both dead. Why should ye, as are free gentlemen adventurers, have any tomlow rules like we was a king's ship? I'll take the lass and chuck five hundred pounds o' my share o' the treasure into the common fund in pay for her, lads, d'ye grudge your cap'n a little fun?"

Non shouted, "Yes," and, "No," but nobody was inclined to interfere.

"Come on, my pretty," he invited Molra.

She met his hot eyes with level scorn.

"Do ye put your finger on me, I'll either be the death of you or myself," she warned him.

He laughed uncertainly and started toward her, and as I lifted my foot to step between them the hilt of a knife was thrust into my right hand.

"Go to it," Silver's voice bade me. "Tell him ye'll fight for her."

I fumbled my step automatically and found myself a pace inside the pool of light surrounding Bones' barrel. Bones himself had come to a halt and was examining me with some evidence of disconcertion.

"He says he'll fight ye for her, Bill," Silver called officiously over my shoulder.

I looked at Peter, and he met my gaze with dumb foreboding.

"We might take to the water," I said.

Molra spoke behind us.

"You will do no such thing," she answered. "Nor will I. We are not yet in such evil case."

"'Twould take ten of your like," retorted Molra, nose in air.

Silver interposed in the midst of a second burst of laughter. I had to admire the second's defiance. He contrived to appear to be coming to the rescue of Bones in such a way as to rouse all the men's resentment against the cause of the implied humiliation.

"Sure, mistress," said Long John very respectfully, "what the cap'n would know is how long it should take to shift the treasure Cap'n Murray had ye bury on the Dead Man's Chest!"

Molra's nose remained in air.

"If ye were not afraid of the hard stentorian voice, "The Buckskin was one o' Murray's crew, and he took the girl in fair fight. He's put his mark on her, and if he wants to fight for her he can, prisoner or no prisoner."

Bones observed the mounting turmoil with an obvious mingling of emotions. He realized he had been tricked, but he did not yet see how it had been done or comprehend the ulterior purpose of Silver's strategy. To do him justice, I do not believe that he feared me or doubted his ability to kill me in a knife-fight, for I had never had occasion to exhibit my skill with the knife before the pirates. He simply knew that he had been lured into a position where he must fight personally to maintain his authority over the crew, and the initial dare of his hatred was naturally directed against me. But he did not forget Silver.

"I'll mind this," he flung at the one-legged man as he crouched forward to meet me, knife poised across his chest and left arm extended to clutch at my knife-wrist or parry a stab from the side.

"Tain't my doin's, Bill, if ye will ha' the girl," remonstrated Silver. "I warned ye o' Rule Four. And the cap'n's all the same as any other in a question o' honor."

"That's right," shouted a score of thralls. "Cap'n's got to meet anybody."

"I'll meet some others 'ter I finish this swab," grunted Bones.

I crept away from him, eazing the effect of the swaying lantern-light upon the deck shadows and the feel of the pithy knives underfoot.

"Stand to it, — ye," he snarled. "Don't let him break from the ring, mates. I want his heart for that wench to chew on—and mind the fat Dutchman doesn't jump on my back. He's a bad 'un, he is."

Silver was prompt to summon half a dozen men to block off Peter, who, having seen me use the scabbard-knife of the frontier since childhood, was not in any way concerned as to what I should be able to do against a half-drunken sailor whose one idea of knife-fighting was to grab his opponent's wrist at the same time the opponent grabbed his, and then strain and heave until one of the pair tore loose and struck.

"Don't ye worry, Bill," counseled the one-legged man soothingly. "We won't let the Dutchman nor nobody else harm ye. Just you hop in and gut the Buckskin—if ye can."

"If I can?" hissed Bones. "Watch me!"

He dropped to all fours and bounded into the air in a clumsy fashion—not at all as an inquisitor warrior would have done it, but like a projectile, with his whole body behind the knife.

I stepped to the left and stabbed down, aiming to drive inside the collar-bone. But the light or something fooled me, and my blade slashed his cheek from eye to mouth, a great searing cut that laid open the whole side of his face.

He followed with surprise, and I was put out myself, for I had thought to finish him. Not a man moved for two or three breaths in the circle around us, for none had expected to see the fight terminated so quickly. Molra told me afterward that it was comical to see how Silver's jaw gaped.

Bones staggered back, the spurting blood blinding him so that he had to feel his way. I followed him slowly, half prepared for a ruse, and he must have heard me, for he called out:

"Don't let him slay me, mate! I can't see, and he's a comin' 'ter me!"

At this a dozen pirates jolted in between us, cursing and threatening me, and I gave ground toward where my friends were standing with Silver.

NOTICING BALSAM BEST FOR DANGEROUS HANG-ON COUGHS

Druggists Declare It Is the Only Cough Balsam of Its Kind.

If you were told by your druggist that he could prepare the best and quickest acting cough balsam there is, but that the price would be high because of its taking 5 hours to compound, and the ingredients expensive, you would want that cough balsam regardless of price wouldn't you?

Anybody would. We all want the best. No ordinary makeshift syrups, quickly bottled like soft drinks, will do for right thinking people, when a dangerous cough has to be stopped and stopped at once.

Fortunately your druggist has on hand at the cost of only 55 cents this very cough balsam. Modern laboratory methods, large quantities, but prepared as carefully as a personal prescription enables your local druggist to sell you Adams' Cough Balsam at this popular price.

To act coughs in the quickest time, dangerous, stubborn ones at that, go to your druggist and get Adams' Cough Balsam. It is made of purest ingredients, formula on the label, that were best 60 years ago. It is the same today, as change.

Get a bottle of Adams' Cough Balsam from your druggist today.

SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT

It charges the larceny of one white-faced Hereford steer, the property of Frank Watson of Lovell.

County Attorney Hastings for the state, Matthew McCarthy was attorney for Moore, Alton G. Wheeler for Lord, and W. G. Conary for Pike.

To summarize the undisputed facts which form the basis of the action, Frank Watson of Lovell owns what is known as the Warren Hill pasture in Waterford, where young stock is turned to pasture. In the summer of 1925 a Hereford steer which had been turned in that pasture was lost. Some time during the past summer, in consequence of statements made to him, Mr. Watson made a claim for $120 as the value of the steer, through Edgar E. Corlies of Bridgton as attorney, against Walter Lord, one of the three respondents in this case, and the claim was later settled, by the delivery of three checks for forty dollars each, one made out to cash and the others to Moore, and all endorsed by Moore.

Walter Lord, one of the respondents, and Frank Pike, the third named, who is Mr. Lord's son-in-law, live on the Lord place about a half mile from No. Waterford, and are farmers and meat dealers, doing business at their place.

Irving Moore, one of the respondents, testified that he worked for Lord and Pike from April 1924 to April 1925, and that later he occasionally did a job of dressing off an animal for them, at a dollar a head. On one day which he thinks was some time in August 1925, he was sent for to dress off a steer, and when he got there he and Pike went up to the Warren Hill pasture, about three-quarters of a mile through pastures and woods, and led back a white-faced steer found there and dressed him off that afternoon. Lord and Pike, he says, each gave him five dollars and told him to keep his mouth shut, which he did until recently. After the claim for $120 was received from the office of Mr. Corlies, there were various conferences of the parties, and the claim was finally settled by the delivery of the three checks to Mr. Corlies' stenographer at his office.

Asked on cross-examination by Mr. Wheeler why he gave his story away this summer, Moore said that he "got caught" with Lord and Pike, and also that he thought that Walter Lord was "underly familiar with the wife, and that was why he told on them."

The testimony of the defense was to the effect that Irving Moore led a steer to that place on a day which they set as the first day of September, 1925, and wanted to sell it to them. That Mr. Lord and Mr. Pike had been busy during the day preceding meat. The steer was brought by them to Moore, and then turned off at once, and Moore was paid fifty dollars, his price, for the steer.

The case was fully presented on both sides, or perhaps it should be said on all sides, as the prevailing situation of the parties made it in a sense a triangle of light, and exceptions were taken in several instances to the rulings of the court. Thirty or more residents of Waterford and adjoining towns were called as witnesses, and the examination of a number of them was long, and the cross-examination of some of them long and strenuous. Every transaction connected with the case, and the numerous conferences of those concerned, were gone into in the utmost detail, and it appeared that at least one family is likely to be broken up as a result of the trial.

In addition to all the papers of various sorts which appeared as exhibits in the case, there was finally brought in as exhibit of another kind, in the form of the corpse of the steer in question, which was shown to the jury.

The jury in this case was out over an hour. The sentences in the case were as follows: Irving Moore was found not guilty and discharged. Walter Lord was sentenced to State's prison at hard labor for not less than one year and not more than two years. Frank Pike was sentenced to the men's reformatory at South Windham. Both took an appeal to the law court, and are out on bail.

Keen interest among thousands of Grange people in New England awaits the final word concerning the big coming event at Portland, Maine, when the National Grange assembles there on the morning of Wednesday, November 10, for its 60th annual session; with the near approach of the date finding more New England people preparing to go to Portland than have ever before set out towards any single event. There is every indication that the estimates made early in the season of an attendance of at least 15,000 Grange members at Portland, with a class to take the Seventh Degree of fully 10,000 candidates, will be completely realized, especially if the Indian summer weather should be one of the season accompaniments.

During the last six week every State Grange in New England has held a series of special sixth degree meetings to fit their members for reception into the highest degree of the organization and a great outpouring of Patrons has resulted. In Maine 4,712 sixth degree initiates are recorded for this series of meetings; almost 2900 in Massachusetts and proportionately large classes in all
